

Things Prohibited.

Smoking tobacco.
Catching eels.
Kissing one's wife publicly.
Sailing a boat.
Washing clothes.
Writing business letters.
Shooting fowls.
Driving cows.
Raking hay.
Carrying grain from a mill.

The blue laws of the New England Puritans prohibited the foregoing on Sundays in the early colonial days says the Kansas City Star. No work, no play, no idle strolling on Sunday was allowed by the Puritans. There was no sign of human life and very little motion or activity, except in the necessary care of dumb beasts.

It was a time for the quiet and orderly going to and from church and at noon the visiting of the churchyard to stand by the graves of the dead.

Capt. Kemble returned home to Boston on Sunday in 1850, after a three years' voyage at sea. Because he kissed his wife as they met on the front doorstep he was convicted of "lewd and lascivious behavior" and sentenced to the public stocks for two hours.

Tobacco was given due attention by the Puritan restrictions and it was unlawful to smoke on Sunday except under certain limitations.

No smoking was permitted within a radius of two miles of a meeting house. Most of the homes were clustered around the meeting-house and on this restriction was well-nigh prohibitive. A Connecticut law permitted a man to smoke once on Sunday, provided he went a journey of not less than ten miles. The length of the one smoke, however, was not specified, and it is feared that this law was greatly abused.

And sitting "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree" was not a wise thing for sweethearts to do on Sunday during those early days.

In 1870 John Lewis and Sarah Chapman were tried for "sitting together on the Lord's day under an apple tree" so natural and harmless a thing to do. There is no record of a fine, but the young couple had the humiliation of a trial in court.

At Plymouth a man was whipped severely for shooting a fowl on Sunday. James Watt, in 1855, was publicly reprimanded for writing a short business note on Sunday. Aquila Chase and his wife were fined in Newbury in 1646 for gathering pears in their garden on Sunday. But after a further investigation the fines were remitted.

The records give many accounts of persons being arrested and fined for unnecessary walking and traveling on Sunday. There was a special restriction that no one should "ride violently to and from meeting" Sunday visiting was a misdemeanor and was punishable by severe fines. These laws were gradually modified in the Eighteenth century. But when Mrs. Trollope, the vicious English traveler, visited Philadelphia about 1839 she found the streets closed by chains against Sunday driving.
